This residency, based at the UF/Shands Eastside Community Practice, focuses on comprehensive training and experience in primary care. The resident functions as a member of the interdisciplinary health-care team and works directly with physicians, nurse practitioners, social workers, nurses, and psychologists. Responsibilities include operating several pharmacist-managed clinics (diabetes, hyperlipidemia, hypertension, anticoagulation), pharmacotherapy consultation, drug information, co-precepting clerkship students and patient and provider education. A research project of publishable quality is also required. The resident also participates in numerous teaching activities at the UF College of Pharmacy. A unique Teaching Certificate Course is also available. Benefits (e.g., health insurance) are available. Additional information about the practice site can be found at:
